tide over the matter until we can plan it out more fully later. This plan was one that Mr. Strasy suggested in the Tamblyn-Brown campaign and was the only item, so far as I know, that I failed to carry out. I doubt whether any body else was able to carry it out after the first week or ten days, and so far as I know our list, none of the information ever reached our cards! I have never been working under greater pressure than at the present, and I would be glad if we could defer carrying out this suggestion until a little later. Of course, if this seems impossible from the point of view of the Committee, I will push it and do my best, but between calls that I ought to make this minute, and between letters to people in places already visited, and letters absolutely necessary to arranging the schedule ahead, it would be very difficult to accomplish this additional item, small as it may seem at the office.

you suggested in your letter

We have been working under many difficulties here on the Coast because all the records that I sent in from my visit in 1924, just before I went to China, and all that were handed in last February, in some way seem to have been lost. I am making every effort possible to record my calls here and my thought has been on my return to New York to get a summary of them on the records then.

I should be glad if you would let me know whether you think under the present circumstances this plan would be feasible, that is, to delay a little until we can catch up, but without incurring further criticism.

Ever sincerely yours,

H. Wallace
